

THE CONSPIRACY TRACKER

ISSUE #21

NOVEMBER 1985

The Masonic Poison Spreads

By Author Weiss

If Communism first saw the light of day in the cradle of Masonry this means that the ideas of Communism were given their first form in the minds of Brother Masons and in the meeting rooms of Masonic Lodges. We know that the craft has always been most prolific even from its very beginnings. In France alone, on the eve of the French Revolution there were 500 active Masonic Lodges, this in addition to the 69 well organized lodges throughout the French regiments. When we come to make a choice of those main stems of Masonry which were responsible for the birth and nurturing of the ideology that was eventually to be known as "Communism" we can narrow the vast field down to three. The lodges belonging to these three main types of Masonry were the first proponents of modern Communist thought. These main Masonic stems were -- in Germany, "Illuminated Masonry"; in France, "Jacobin Masonry" and in Italy "Carbonarist Masonry". Now a word about each.

ILLUMINIST MASONRY

"The secret society known as the Order of the Illuminati and which was allied with Freemasonry was founded in Bavaria in the latter part of the eighteenth century (1776) by Brother Adam Weishaupt. (Haywood & Craig - "A History Of Freemasonry" - 1927.) "It was in that year (1776) that Adam Weishaupt of Germany wrote out the six principles of what we today call Communism." (Brother Unmacht, a 33 degree Mason writing in "The New Age", vol. LVII, no, 11, page 667).

The very next year he was initiated at Munich into the Lodge "Theodor zum guten Rath". Collaborator with Weishaupt was Brother Knigge alias Philo who succeeded in introducing Illuminism into the lodges of Munich and Freisin. The infiltration of Freemasonry by Weishaupt's Illuminati was completed by 1782 at which time an International convention was held at Wilhelmsbad. At this convention which was attended by representative Masons from the lodges of England, the United States, France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Netherlands and the colonies, "Illuminated" Masonry was proclaimed by the assembled delegates. What were the "illuminated ideas" which Brother Weishaupt sold his brother Masons at Wilhelmsbad? Weishaupt himself tells us that he took some from Masonry itself and contributed some of his own. These ideas which were adapted by the Masonic Congress at Wilhelmsbad were four:

- (1) Atheism
- (2) Communism of goods.
- (3) The destruction of the Catholic Church
- (4) An international society of absolute equality.

The platform of the Illuminati included such choice thoughts as the following: "To reinstate man in his primitive right of equality and liberty we must begin by destroying all religion and civil society, and finish by the destruction of all property right...A time shall come when man shall acknowledge no other law than the great book of nature. This revolution shall be the work of secret societies... It is necessary to establish a universal regime and empire over the whole world... We must acquire the direction of education and of Church government, the professorial chairs and pulpit.." (Einige Originalshr. des Ill. Ordens", Munich 1787, passim).

Illuminist Masonry was condemned by the Bavarian government in 1787; but the infiltration had been made. A secret society like Masonry is a perfect vehicle for forbidden ideas and for that reason such ideas do not die easily, if at all. In France, Illuminism took the form of "Martinism" (introduced by Brother San Martin) derived from Brother Pasqualis, a Portuguese Mason. Illuminism was taken to Moscow by Brother Johann Schwartz circa 1790. "It was especially successful at Moscow, called the capital of the dissatisfied by Count de Segur. One might say without exaggeration that Moscow was then (circa 1790) a Masonic city. All the city officials beginning with the governor-general, Count Ichernyshev, all the high officials of the government, judiciary and police were Masons. The oldest Russian school, the University of Moscow, was likewise in the hands of the Masons, a professor of that University, Schwartz himself, being at the head of the Masonic organization. Under Novikoff, his successor, the Order grew still further in numbers and in wealth..." (Bulletin de la Grande Loge de France, June 1934.)

JACOBIN MASONRY

With "Jacobin" Masonry we get a more direct link with ideas of violence and power. The name "Jacobin" owes its origin to the fact that the lodges or clubs met in what was formerly the rectory of the Dominicans (known as Jacobins because their first house in Paris was in the Rue St. Jacques). By the time of the Reign of Terror (1793) Jacobin Masonry had become completely radical. Jacobin lodges spread their philosophical ideas also to the Rhineland, home of the future Brother Karl Marx. In fact by the 1790s, Jacobin Masonry had become a genuine international movement. Not until the days of the Second International was there to be such a cosmopolitan outlook; even Marxist socialism lacked the hope and the freshness of the Jacobin type of Masonry. After the Reign of Terror, the Jacobin lodges were suppressed, but Brother Gracchus Babeuf revived them under the name "Society of the Equals". This society was suppressed in 1796. After this suppression, Jacobinism took the form of Babouvism -- and plotted to overthrow the government. The plots failed, Brother Babeuf was executed, but Brother Filippo Buonarrotti carried on the Jacobin traditions by propaganda in France, Belgium and Switzerland, Buonarrotti published a sort of breviary for revolutionaries which enunciated that Jacobin Masonry, in the form of Babouvism was "striving towards something more sublime, more equitable, than the agrarian law: -- common property." By 1815 international Jacobin Masonry had been driven underground. After being cut short by Louis Philippe's acceptance in 1830, it did much to create the 1848 revolution and the famous Paris Commune -- "first dictatorship of the proletariat" -- in 1871. It even influenced the radical Chartist movement in England. The ideology of the Jacobin movement is best sought for in the speeches of Robespierre and Saint-Just. We may sum up the distinctly Jacobin contribution to Communist ideology this way:

- (1) Class consciousness.
- (2) A fighting tradition through tactics of direct resistance.
- (3) Centralization of power.

Jacobin Masonry supplies us with a good example of how Masonry acted as a perfect vehicle for the evolution of Communist concepts, which were to come to full fruition with Marxism.

Before 1789, the French lodges were not conspiratorial but, gradually, the ease with which conspiracy could travel under the cloak of a Masonic Lodge began to become evident to the radical elements within the Lodges so that, by the time of the Reign of Terror, Masonic aspirations and a "common store of ideas" began to show possibilities. This lesson was learned in Russia too as Brother Bourishkine tells us: "The members of the Craft in Russia were always deeply impressed by the mysteries of the legend surrounding the Masonic Order. The idea that at the head of Universal Masonry there were unknown superiors who pursued their own aspirations, the first realization of which was precisely the French Revolution, showed them the work of Masonry under a new aspect." Then he adds, rather significantly -- "The history of Russian Masonry, so little known, will fill many interesting and instructive new pages in the historical record of Universal Masonry." ("Far Eastern Freemason", October 1934). The Masonic aspiration were soon to be realized. In fact the Paris lodges had already given the name "Communism" to their aspirations. The particular brand that was being bred in the Paris underground received its appellation sometime between 1834 and 1839 and was used publicly about 1840. Between 1840 and 1872 the term "Communism" took on the meaning of direct revolutionary action for the overthrow of capitalist society. Thus was Marxism developing -- behind the closed doors of the lodges.

CARBONARI AND "FRONTS"

The Carbonari were Masons who borrowed their symbols and rituals from the trade of charcoal merchants, hence the name "carbonari". They are an offspring of Weishaupt's Illuminati. Carbonarist Masonry first manifested itself as a political force in the province of Franche-Comte during the early years of the French Revolution, and it too became a vehicle for revolutionary ideology. It was introduced into Italy about 1806 and, like Jacobin Masonry, spread rapidly among the soldiers of Napoleon's army. Until 1820, however, it remained little more than a threat. But by 1821 Carbonarist ideas began to work and in France, as elsewhere, Carbonarism was the cause of several mutinies among the troops. Its most active revolutionary period was from 1830 to 1841. After that the Carbonarist lodges died out. However, the "good cousins" Brother Blanqui, Brother Garibaldi and Brother Mazzini, whom we shall meet again, carried on the traditions of revolution. If we were to sum up the contribution which Carbonarist Masonry made to Communist revolutionary thought we might list them this way:

- (1) Guerrilla tactics.
- (2) Assassination as a means of initiating insurrection.
- (3) The use of prominent personages as "tools" and "fronts".

In connection with this last point an order from the "Alta Vendita" or Grand Lodge in Italy is enlightening -- "The Alta Vendita desires that under one pretence or another, as many princes and wealthy persons as possible should be introduced into the Masonic Lodges. A prince who has not a kingdom to expect is good fortune for us. There are many of them in that plight. Make Freemasons of them. The lodge will conduct them to Carbonarism. These poor princes will serve our ends, while thinking to labor only for their own. They form a magnificent sign-board, and there are always fools enough to be found who are ready to compromise themselves in the service of a conspiracy, of which some princes or other may seem to be the ringleader."

(Editor: This is the second portion of Arthur Weiss's book "Freemasonry and Communism", published in the Philippines in 1955. More will be presented in the future, including info on The Communist Manifesto, the First International, and the Paris Commune.)

Does Norway Have The Bomb?

By E. Edwin Austin
(Mutilation Data Center)

What would Norway do if they had atomic weapons? Many would say "They don't have them, so who cares?"

Or do they? When I put together a series of events, questions arise. More questions arise about possible clandestine links between this relative newcomer to the atomic club -- if, in fact, Norway has such weapons -- and the Nazi Government in exile in South America, a secretive Identity-linked element in the U.S. Government and similar small, militant, rightist groups in both the West and the Russian Communist Bloc.

We begin with WW2. Norway was known for the size and loyalty of it's "Quisling" faction, who were way out in front of the pack in the development of atomic weaponry for Hitler. It has been publicly stated by military historians that the bombing of Norway's "heavy water plant" may have turned the course of the war by setting Hitler's atomic research back far enough for us to defeat him.

The original Quisling clique still exists in Norway, just as Hitler supporters exist in the United States and Russia. As with other Hitler Nazis, they are dying or going senile, to be replaced with younger men who keep the tradition alive.

Now a jump-shot.

Ever since WW2, persistent folklore has Hitler escaping Berlin to take refuge in a huge cave somewhere in the Antarctic. One still sees it occasionally in tabloids and obscure pamphlets.

There is such a cave, on remote Bouvet Island, just outside the Antarctic Circle, claimed by Norway. (Book. "The Antarctic," by H.G.R. King. Arco Press, New York, 1969 See p 162 for an aerial photo of Kapp Concision. The photo clearly shows a huge cave, capable of admitting ocean-going ships, on the northwest corner of Bouvet.)

Although outside the Antarctic Circle, Bouvet is almost completely covered by a glacier and considered to be a meteorological part of the Antarctic.

The legendary cave exists in the legendary Antarctic region. It would be in reason to speculate about some kind of Nazi presence on Bouvet Island to account for the persistence of the folk legend -- particularly when you consider the fact that most such legends are distorted reality.

Now jump again, to 1961.

When the volcano on Tristan da Cunha blew it's cork, the islanders were removed to England. They became emotionally disturbed from urban pressures and were returned to the peace of their lonely island by the British Government, using a pair of British and Dutch ships. A National Geographic writer was assigned to cover the return.

He spent considerable time on the island. If you look at the pictures in the article, you will note an anomaly. Two huge ships, with cargo equipment of the kind used to unload heavy equipment on isolated beaches. Far beyond the needs of the tiny party that was actually discharged. The size of the ships is explainable as a drop just off a planned route. But beach cranes? No ship uses those in normal commerce. They are for isolated beaches where no dock exists.

The text of the article contains two more anomalies.

A passing ship dropped off mail. It was identified as the "South African research ship RSA, en route from the Republic of South Africa to Gough Island, 230 miles to the southeast." Now look at a good map or globe. That ship went close to 400 miles out of it's way to deliver mail. South Africa can't afford that kind of humanitarianism. The United States, yes. England, maybe. But South Africa? No way! Research? what kind of research, considering that South Africa has a long established weather station on Gough?

The third anomaly came almost on the heels of the second. A U.S. Navy LSD, the U.S.S. Spiegel Grove, suddenly turned up, using what gives every indication of begging a hastily contrived "cover" and summarily yanked the writer off Tristan.

Now what was that all about? Taken together, the three anomalies indicate something unusual going on somewhere south of Tristan da Cunha, involving Britain, Holland, South Africa and the U.S. Navy.

Taken together with later events, I suspect a group of ships from several nations used the Tristan da Cunha islanders as "cover" to rendezvous for the preliminary work on an atomic test site on Bouvet Island, with concealment of buildings and other facilities inside the huge cave. I also suspect that subsequent "scientific expeditions" to Bouvet -- which outnumber all others combined in frequency, size and time spent -- were "cover" for the research.

Whether those tests were conducted with the knowledge of the governments who owned the ships is another matter. I got a big, fat hunch they knew nothing. It wouldn't be the first time -- nor the last (Tristan information from an undated xerox of the National Geographic article. You can pull it by using their cumulative index for the middle 60's.)

Now jump to the Antarctic Journal of the United States, Vol. 1, 1966, p 232, to find South Africa's real target -- Bouvet Island. With a United States Government observer along, no less! Why would South Africa spout "disinformation" to the National Geographic, and why would the United States Navy back it?

The next jump takes us to Facts on File, 1977, p 663-4. Two articles. The gist is that South Africa was about to test an atomic weapon in the Kalahari Desert. They were detected by Russia, who informed the United States, France and others. South African Finance Minister Owen Harwood told the whole bunch to go give birth to a square egg. "If we did at any time wish to do other things (than) nuclear power) with our nuclear potential, we will jolly well do so..."

From middle 1977, jump to Facts on File 1979, p 824. Our Vela Satellite detected an A-blast somewhere in the South Atlantic between South Africa and Antarctica. Bouvet Island is inside the specified area. A New Zealand monitoring station detected fallout from the blast two weeks later. (Same source, p 882.)

The whole world jumped on South Africa. They claimed innocence and showed some degree of alarm. Nobody believed them, of course.

What I find odd is the reaction of our own military intelligence people. Things were in such turmoil that President Carter was left mumbling embarrassedly to himself -- in public.

Aside from expressions of disgust with our military non-intelligence, one wee small voice posed an interesting question: "...another nation might have chosen a test site near South Africa in an attempt to throw blame on the South African Government." (Military propagandist, quoted in the New York Times, shortly after the explosion. Military intelligence agents are crazy, but they doggone sure ain't stupid! In retrospect, this has the CIA telling Norway they know what's going on.)

In April, 1985, I learned that Norway had a continuous "scientific expedition" on Bouvet Island from 1976 to the year of the blast, 1979. (Letter from the Scott Polar Research Institute, Cambridge University, Cambridge, England, dated April 12, 1985. It says information about the unclassified portions of this activity can be had from Columbia University Press, 136 South Broadway, Irvington-on-the-Hudson, New York 10533. The reference keys are Norsk Polarinstitut, Skrifter No 175.)

That puts a different light on the Vela-detected blast. Norway is an isolated nation who marches to their own drummer. There have always been close ties to Hitler, including trying to beat us to the super-bomb. It sure fits, doesn't it?

I think we need to look closer at Norway. We also need to take a closer look at Bouvet. My information is that several nations are taking clandestine looks at Bouvet, possibly based on my letters to their embassies, giving the bare bones of what appears here.

For which I apologize to no one! If Norway has the A-bomb, the rest of the world has both a right and a duty to evaluate the potential for future controversy with Norway.

The Hidden Empire

By Al LaBron

Chapter 1

"An Introduction to the Shaver Mystery Conspiracy"

PART 2

The main argument against the theory of subterranean life is (1) The earth's interior is too hot to support life at any great depth, and (2) Caverns of sufficient magnitude to house an entire civilization. Another argument against this would be (3) An underground environment would lack sufficient air, water, food and light to support life. Let's tackle #3 first:

If the civilization were reasonably advanced, the problem of light could be easily solved through their technology. If not, there are other sources of possible natural lighting, for instance, phosphorescent algae or moss. Discoveries of deep oceanic trenches reveal that life in these incredible, dark and murky depths have adapted in a strange way. Many of the plants and animals have developed their own "lighting" in their adaption to their environment. Could this also be the case in an underground environment? Another form of adaption to a dark environment was revealed in an article in WEEKLY WORLD NEWS (May 29, 1984). This article revealed that a street collapse in Mexico City lead investigators to the discovery of an ancient maze of tunnels beneath the city. Discovered in the rubble they found strange beings, 2-3 feet in height, who possessed curious "mole-like" features as if they had completely adapted to a dark subterranean environment. The most amazing feature, however, was their eyes. They were, according to German anthropologist, Dr. Wilhelm Gresch, as "large as saucers.. I am convinced that those eyes enable the mole people to actually see in the pitch dark." The bodies of these mole people were reportedly taken to the University of Mexico, where they are undergoing pathological testing in a secret lab.

If the subterranea is inhabited by various types of fauna (some reports even claim that prehistoric forms of reptilian and mammal life exist down below, which escaped the catastrophe which terminated their surface cousins), then food would not be much of a problem. What about subterranean flora? One proof that large underground flora could exist in pitch blackness appeared in an article by Clara Homes titled "ICE CAVE ON COW MOUNTAIN", (Travel, Vol. II, Sept. 1897, p.708) and later reprinted in CAVES OF COLORADO, by Lloyd E. Parris (1973. Pruett Pub., Boulder, CO., pp, 10-13.). This cave on Cow Mountain six miles east by one mile north of Cripple Creek, Colorado, is described as "a fairy grotto, the very place of the gnomes" because of its many beautiful formations. At one point in a narrative describing a visit to the cave, Clara Homes wrote: "...At a depth of about eighty feet, another room was reached, much larger than the others, and very lofty. The ice had gradually decreased until there was but little in this room; looking upward we saw a crevice, in what might be termed a ceiling, and after much effort, we climbed up to the attic, as one of the party expressed it. We could only thrust our head through, the opening being too small to admit the shoulders. We found a room about eight by six feet, with an arched ceiling four or five feet in height; within which were some very peculiar fungi (i.e. mushrooms), having a dark brown, button-shaped base, from which grew fronds of pure-white, like vegetables grown in the dark; in length these fronds were about four or five inches, with a curvature on the end, or a light brown...The draught is very strong and cold the whole distance (most caves remain a constant 50-60 degrees throughout the year, though there are exceptions as in this case - A.L.); the supposition is, from this indication, that at some greater depth, a much larger cave will be found..."

The need for water would be no problem at all, as many cavers can attest to. Often, water is so prevalent in caverns that exploration of them is made all the more difficult. Geologists accept the fact that huge streams, rivers, and even underground lakes exist beneath the surface (many people take advantage of these subterranean streams, drilling wells connecting with them in order to irrigate crops, etc.). Also, there are literally thousands of streams which "disappear" beneath the earth, and do not reappear. It is certainly not at all impossible for even large underground seas or oceans to exist underground, similar to the large "central sea" mentioned in Jules Verne's novel "A JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH". A good example would be the "Lost Sea" 300 feet underground in the Craighead Caverns near Sweetwater, Tennessee, which covers an area over $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres in extent. Underground lakes and streams would most likely be filled with fish, such as those which were discovered in artesian wells in Texas. One of these specimens is on exhibit at the Witte Memorial Museum, San Antonio, and was retrieved from a well two and three-quarters miles east and $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile north of the Alamo, from a depth of 1250 feet. These were "blind" fish, similar to those discovered in Mammoth Cave, whitish and lacked any pigmentation, a result of their adaption to an underworld environment. (source: "Blind Fish from Artesian Wells", NSS BULLETIN, April, 1948. p.111). A similar report came from FATE Magazine (Nov. 1954, p.13) which stated: "In the early 1950's, a Canadian company was drilling for oil in the province of Alberta. The oil exploration crew put down a 500-foot shot hole near the surface. The water was filled with thousands of small fish, which Dr. R.B. Miller of the University of Alberta identified as five-spined stickleback. Apparently the drill had tapped an underground stream. Another underground stream was reported in an article in the OAKLAND TRIBUNE (Oakland, CA. -Sept. 18, 1983), in an article titled, "RIVERSIDE MAN CONDUCTS LIFELONG QUEST FOR AN UNDERGROUND RIVER". Jim Cook a member of the board of directors of the Western Municipal Water District of Riverside, believes he knows the answer to the water problem in the desert regions of California. He is in search of a pristine, quarter-mile-wide river which he believes is flowing undetected beneath the parched terrain of the Mojave Desert, a river of pure, fresh water three times the volume of the Colorado River, which averages 15 million acre-feet per year. Cook first heard of the elusive underground river back in 1961 while chatting with a friend who told him of a geologist, a consultant to the U.S. Department of Defense, who was searching for a water supply for Fort Irwin in the 1930's. The search took the geologist, who Cook identified as William E. Leahy, into an abandoned shaft in Baker, California. After descending 2000 feet into the ground, Leahy supposedly found a limestone watercourse. "He followed it until he found himself standing in the edge of a river that was utterly fantastic," Cook said. Shortly after he heard the legend of the river, Cook shared the story with Leroy Holmes, who then owned a gas station in San Bernardino and who is now president of the San Bernardino Valley Municipal Water District board of directors. Cook said one of Holmes' employees heard the tale and told Cook that his father was an engineer and surveyor for the U.S. Army when Fort Irwin was built. He told Cook he could take him to the hole leading to the subterranean river. But Cook didn't immediately take him up on the offer and then lost track of the man. During the more than 20 years since that tantalizing conversation, Cook has made intermittent efforts to find the river. "There's an awful lot of fresh water down there," he said, "and I sure would like to find it." If officials at Ft. Irwin (which is rumored to be honey-combed underneath with secret tunnels, by the way) know of this valuable reservoir of fresh water, then why aren't they sharing this knowledge (and the water) for the public's benefit?? Why the "conspiracy" of silence? Cook has also learned that the government is aware of at least 6 subterranean rivers of this type. They performed a dye tracing on one of these rivers, and one of the tracings revealed that the river emerged in the Pacific Ocean off the continental shelf!

What about air? Is there enough air underground to support life? Franklin Folsom, in his book EXPLORING AMERICAN CAVES (p.203) gives the following answer to this question: "It is part of folklore in some quarters that cave air is dangerous or that there may not be enough to breathe. Spelunkers know better. They know that caves for the most part are a paradise for sufferers from hay fever, since the underground air lacks pollen and is free of dust unless humans stir it up. Nevertheless, there are persistent rumors that Kiser Cave between Fredericksburg and Mason, Texas, pours out a steady stream of carbon dioxide from its mouth." So, it is apparent that most (if not all) caverns possess enough air for lifeforms to live on, even at great depths.

Now, for the additional "evidence" which seems to support Shaver's claim that the earth is inhabited within as well as without:

90% of all life forms on Earth, spend most of their life underground. This would include the ground-dwelling insects, snakes, rabbits, moles, beavers, bears, etc. to name a few.

In 1980, a British-Malaysian exploration team discovered the "Sarawak" chamber beneath the island of Borneo in the East Indies. When surveyed, this single cavern proved to be over 2300 feet long, 980 feet wide on the average, and nowhere less than 270 feet high. This chamber in itself is easily large enough to hold within itself the two previous contenders for the world's largest cavern - Carlsbad's Big Room and the Salle de la Verna in the Pierre Saint-Martin, in France. Yankee Stadium could fit in one end of this tremendous chamber with room to spare! So much for "Big Enough". If caves of that magnitude exist, then it is certainly possible that in deeper and more inaccessible reaches of this planet, cavities large enough to make the Sarawak chamber a mere worm-hole by comparison could possibly exist also.

FATE Magazine (Sept. 1966) reported the following: "...We have two different clippings from Darwin, Australia, concerning the discovery of animal flesh, hairs and hide during a well-drilling operation at a depth of 103 feet. An experienced well-driller, Norman Jenson, was boring for water 15 miles from Killarney homestead, about 350 miles south of Darwin. He had penetrated seven layers of limestone, clay, red soil and sandstone when, at 102 feet, the bit of the drill struck something soft and quickly dropped to 111 feet. Jenson thought the drill had penetrated an underground water course and lowered a pump to make tests. His pump brought to the surface a bucketful of what he believed to be flesh, bone, hide and hairs. Jenson told Constable Roy Harvey he never had seen anything like this before. Some of the material was given to chickens at Killarney station. They ate it, apparently without ill effect. Several days later the rest of the matter had not putrefied, although it had been left in the open air. Dr. W.A. Langsford, Northern Territory Director of health in Darwin stated that the microscopic examination revealed the material to be hair and tissue. Samples were to be forwarded to forensic laboratories in Adelaide for further tests. There is even a possibility, he said, that the material is human."

Lucius Annaeus Seneca (First century Roman philosopher), in his manuscript QUESTIONS OF NATURE, wrote the following words: "...winds issue from caves and recesses in the interior of the earth. The whole earth is not constructed of solid texture all the way to the bottom, but is hollow in many places and suspended over dark recesses. In some places voids filled with water, in other places voids without moisture. Even though no light is there to show difference in atmosphere, I will say that, none the less, clouds and mist exist in the gloom. For even these do not exist above ground merely because they are seen, but they are seen because they exist."

Researcher Marshall B. Gardner stated the following in his book A JOURNEY TO THE EARTH'S INTERIOR: "Professor Mohr of Bonn has written a very important paper on thermometric investigations of a 4,000 ft. boring at Sperenberg...(Mohr) finds that while there is an increase of temperature as we go down, the rate of that increase gets less and less all the time, so that it will be nil, that is to say there will no longer be any increase, and the point at which heat would cease to increase would be about 13,550 feet." Other scientists believe that if the earth were as hot at it's center as present establishment theories allow, then this planet would have long ago exploded of its own energy like a giant fusion bomb. Therefore they say, the interior of the planet cannot be nearly as hot as present establishment theorists would have us believe.

TO BE CONTINUED IN A FUTURE ISSUE

For further studies on the Shaver Mystery, subscribe to SHAVERTRON -- the only source of post-deluge Shaverania. Sample: $3.00. 3 issue subscription for $9.00. Overseas -- $11.00 surface, $13.00 air mail. Write: Richard Toronto - P.O. Box 248 - Vallejo, California 94590.

The Vampire Cult

By Elliott O'Donnell

(Reprinted from his book "Strange Cults And Secret Societies of Modern London", 1935 - E.P.Dutton & Co., New York.)

A few years ago, the dismembered body of a young girl was found in the Seine. There were curious marks on it, and these marks, together with the way in which the limbs were severed, suggested to the astute French police that it was no ordinary murder, but the work of some secret society. The girl was never identified, and the crime is still regarded by the general public as an unsolved mystery. Other unsolved crimes suggestive of secret societies and Black Magic are as follows:

In February, 1932, the nude body of Suzanne Meyer, a typist, was found on the top of a steep embankment close to a lonely cemetery, a few miles from Strassburg. She had been strangled with a piece of her own undergarments, and the peculiarity of the knots and certain wounds on the face denoted, so the Strassburg police declared, a most unusual crime. Suzanne bore an excellent reputation. So far as was known, she had had no intrigues with men and, according to her parents had always been well behaved and steady. The police were at a standstill, when they got a break through similar happenings elsewhere. The remains of an elderly woman were found near Le Mans; of a 14 year old girl, named Louise Bonfiglis, in a lonely house outside Marseilles; and of a widow named Richard in an isolated farm at Pressoir, near Le Mares. In all cases, the victims bore similar wounds, and two crossed knives were placed closed beside their respective bodies. This, to anyone with an extensive knowledge of Secret Societies, naturally suggested gang or secret society work, and recalled to mind certain grim discoveries of recent years in and around London; for instance, the finding of a woman's severed leg on Wimbledon Common, about the time of the murder of Miss Kaye by Patrick Mahon. Indeed, it was suggested in the contemporary English Press that the severed leg merely indicated another Mahon crime, but markings on the soil, by the side of the leg, representing crossed knives, suggested to certain of the Continental police, who were interested in the case, the work of some secret society of Far Eastern origin.

Some time later their suspicions were further strengthened by the discovery of bodies in the Thames with similar markings on them, and by the committal of several murders of a similar nature to that of Suzanne Meyer, in Russia and Finland. To the Strassburg police there seemed little doubt that a very sinister secret society, had branches all over Europe, and they had hardly come to this conclusion when they received the following letter: -- "We are the murderers of Suzanne Meyer. Beware of us. We were compelled to murder by destiny. Beware, beware. In three months it will be the turn of Fraulein Fuchs."

The letter bore no signature, only the sign of the crossed knives. The Fuchs family were so terrified that they kept their doors locked and bolted, inspecting callers from an upper window.

The police took every precaution. Plain clothes detectives kept watch, day and night, outside the Fuch's house, and the search for Suzanne's murderers continued. The police eventually learning that the crossed knives were a symbol in Black Magic and often used by cults and societies suspected of practicing it, pressed on their inquiries in that direction, and presently got a break. Spies brought them news of a Black Magic Cult in Strassburg and of a member of it known as "the vampire," from his boasts of sucking blood from both the living and the dead. Suzanne's remains were again examined and the police made a startling discovery. The wounds on her face, which were so difficult to explain, were made by human teeth; her blood had been sucked. The murderer was a vampire, the "vampire man" of the Black Magic Cult. They got on his tracks, so far as to learn that he had quitted the continent and was said to be hiding somewhere in London.

So far as I know the murderer of Suzanne Meyer is still at large, in all probability, sheltered by some Black Magic Secret Society in London. The sensation caused by her death had barely died down before reports of another man vampire of a Black Magic Secret Society got into circulation. Five women were found murdered in lonely spots around Lowicz, in Poland, and all of them had been horribly mutilated, in a manner suggesting vampirism.

Rumours that Black Magic Secret Societies existed in London had long been current; these rumours now got into the press. Not many people believed in real vampirism, that is to say vampires as alleged to have existed so extensively in Hungary and the Balkans during the eighteenth and early part of the nineteenth centuries, but they thought it not unlikely that degenerates, or perhaps, mad people, were imagining themselves vampires and adopting vampire ways.

CONSPIRACY NOTES

(1) THE ORDER (not Skull & Bones) TARGETS KISSINGER. (From the Bangor Daily News, Sat.-Sun. Sept. 14-15, 1985.) SEATTLE (AP) -- Members of The Order were assigned to assassinate Henry Kissinger, David Rockefeller and other prominent people as part of their oath to rid America of Jewish influence, a former member of the white supremacist group testified Friday. The members went as far as to plan a suicide bombing at the Olympic Hotel in Seattle in November 1983, when a member of France's wealthy Rothschild family supposedly was to visit. The testimony came from Denver Daw Parmenter II, one of 23 people indicted for racketeering in what the government says was a crime wave by the group that included murder, armored-car robberies and counterfeiting. Parmenter, 33, pleaded guilty in January to racketeering in exchange for a 20-year term in a medium security prison. Ten other indictees pleaded guilty earlier, and one defendant pleaded guilty Friday. ...Parmenter was the second government witness in the case before U.S. District Judge Walter McGovern. The government alleges the defendants ran a national crime campaign to support their white supremacist views with the ultimate goal of overthrowing the U.S. government. Parmenter testified that at a September 1983 meeting in which The Order was formed, the nine people attending were each assigned an assassination target. Those targets, he said, included Henry Kissinger, David Rockefeller, and the heads of three American television networks. His target, he said, was Fred Silverman, then head of NBC....The assassinations were to be carried out if the group's members became scattered and The Order destroyed, he said. In at least one case, however, members actually planned to carry out an assassination, he said. In November, 1983, Parmenter said he traveled to Seattle from the Spokane area with defendants Randolph Duey and Bruce Pierce. Also on the trip were Order founder Robert Jay Mathews, and members

Dan Bauer and Bill Soderquist. The purposes of the trip, he said, was to scout places for a possible armored-car robbery. Bauer said he heard that one of the Rothschild family was to visit Seattle that month. Parmenter said he and Bauer went to a University of Washington library where they found details of the visit in a "Jewish publication." The group then watched the hotel. "We were thinking about blowing up the reception area or wherever he was going to speak," Parmenter said. "We wanted to kill him." The members discussed various ways of committing the act, including a suicide bombing...The plan never came off, he said, because "it was felt we just didn't have the time to get organized and get it accomplished, so it was dropped."

(2) 666. (From The Sun, Sept. 3, 1985.) If 13 is bad luck, 666 is evil and terror.

• SATAN'S POWER is everywhere, claims a witchcraft researcher, and his evil presence is usually felt wherever the Mark of The Beast, number 666, turns up

It is, according to the Book of Revelations, the Mark of the Beast, the number of Satan or the Antichrist. When that number turns up, according to a Montreal English teacher who collects 666 stories, the Devil's footsteps may soon follow. Houses numbered 666 may shelter witches. Mysteriously wrecked cars turn up with 666 on the speedometer, and phones with that combination seem haunted by strange voices. Paul West became interested in studying Satanism while getting his degree in Miltonic studies. At first, he studied Witchcraft in the 17th century; the peak year was 1666. Then he realized there were signs of devil worship all around him. "There are many modern covens of witches. They hold Black Masses, have orgies, cast spells and so on, and they often do it from their homes. Typically it's an ordinary, innocent-looking house and people have no idea what's going on. But, if you look at the number, it's often got three sixes in it", say West. ...Among West's collected 666 stories are these: (a) A graduate student feels his steering wheel unexplainably wrenched from his hands crossing a bridge. When the car is fished out of the river, the speedometer's last three digits are 666. (b) A phone in southern California seems haunted. It rings and no one is there. Mysterious voices and noises are heard. Threats are delivered. At last, the frustrated telephone company discontinues the number: 686-6666. (c) A New York department store is planning to forward its 1000th customer a microwave oven. All morning they keep track of customers entering the store. Just before noon, a man walks in and keels over dead of a heart attack. His number? 666! "I had a friend with a BMW no one could fix", recalls West. "One day he said, 'I think my car is haunted.' A bell went off in my head. I looked at the license plate. It had 666 on it. He changed plates, and the problems disappeared," he says.

(3) SOVIET FRONT? A reader of CI wrote to Mr. C.B. Baker, publisher of Youth Action News, with a question about Lyndon LaRouche and New Solidarity. Mr. Baker responded to the reader: "In response to your question about LaRouche and NEW SOLIDARITY: I studied their material for 7 or 8 years and am strongly convinced they are a Soviet front. The best example of this was the NEW SOLIDARITY disinformation when the Pope was shot by a KGB plot. N.S. went out of its way to put out all kinds of totally false leads to lead away from the KGB and the U.S.S.R. New Solidarity has repeatedly advocated open borders and unlimited Mexican immigration into the U.S. They have collected information on and put out a lot of lies about various American Rightist leaders -- some of whom are known personally to me. They are about 80% Jewish and their special intelligence operation is run by a Jewess named Felice Gelman -- she has people under her collecting all kinds of information about American patriotic leaders so I have been told by people who met directly with her. I don't have time to go into a complete one on the U.S. Labor Party and its paper New Solidarity. What has really shocked me is that many patriotic leaders have been duped by this gang of pro-Soviet Marxists." (Editor: Youth Action News is available for contributions (not subscription rates) from: Youth Action News - P.O. Box 312 - Alexandria, Virginia 22313. Mr. Baker's reports on weather war, the Trilateral Commission, unrestricted immigration, etc. are unequalled.)

(4) FU MANCHU. Perhaps conspiracy researchers will have to start checking out comic books as well. A reader sent us a Marvel Comic titled "Masters of Kung Fu". It seems Marvel has resurrected the insidious Dr. Fu Manchu -- fictional creation of Golden Dawn member, Sax Rohmer. Fu Manchu's fictional battles against Scotland Yard's Sir Denis Nayland Smith were fought on London's East End -- haunt of Jack the Ripper. Anyway, in the current Marvel format, Fu has become head of a secret society called the Golden Dawn, and has linked up such other secret orders as the Templars and the Thugs. Perhaps, this letter printed in Masters of Kung Fu for September, 1980, will give the reader an idea of what's going on: "I just picked up for the first time...an issue of MASTER OF KUNG FU...I'm now convinced that Fu Manchu is nothing less than the leader of that fabled secret society, the Illuminati. Even the title ("The Phoenix and The Snake") gives some evidence of this; the Phoenix was the secret name of Aleister Crowley, an infamous Illuminati conspirator, when he was in the Ordo Templi Orientis. Also, the ancient Egyptians placed Sirius, the dog-star which is associated with the Illuminati, in the constellation Phoenix. On page 27, Fu Manchu says, "Orientis Illuminati". This is the crowning piece of evidence, coupled with Fah Lo Suee's (Fu's daughter --Editor) statement, "You are the one true light of illumination." This, however, is only the tip of the iceberg. 23 is a number with mystical meaning among the Illuminati, as is 666. At the beginning of the story Fu refers to his followers (among them the Hashishen) as members of the 23rd sect and moreover, as members of the Order of the Golden Dawn -- which is the name of a group of Bay area Illuminati-oriented witches. The Hashishen were the first Illuminati in 1090 AD. Their leader was Hassan I Sabbah...The symbol of the Illuminati was the Eye in the Triangle or Pyramid, which appears numerous times in this story. First: Fu Manchu walks through a triangular portal with an eye painted atop it. Second: he forms the eye in the pyramid with his fingers and right eye while bathing in the elixir. Third: he envisions the mystic numbers 23, 5, and 666 (in a pyramid, no less) and a golden apple along with the eye in the pyramid on page 11. Last, he says, "I smoked...the bitter taste of sweet dreams." I believe he was smoking hashish, since he immediately experiences seemingly drug-induced visions. If this is so, then even more evidence has been given that Fu Manchu is an Illuminati, since many Illuminati sects (including the Hashishen, of course) used hashish in their rituals."

(5) SATAN AND CTHULHU. Anton Lavey's Church of Satan in San Francisco performs rituals based on H.P. Lovecraft's "Cthulhu Mythos". In one ritual, the Satanists chant "Honor to Yog-Sothoth." (Yog-Sothoth is the chief Lovecraftian entity, even more so than Cthulhu.) The ceremony is called The Ceremony of the Nine Angles -- and also contains praise for the entity Nyarlathotep, who is hailed as "Prince of the Abyss". The ceremony ends hailing Yog-Sothoth, Nyarlathotep, and Satan. Another ceremony is called "The Call To Cthulhu", and it concludes by praising Cthulhu and Satan. It has been stated by others that the Church of Satan uses rituals devised by the Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO). For details on the rituals, see "The Satanic Rituals" By Anton Lavey.

(6) BEWARE OF SEANCES. (From the British newspaper, Daily Mail, April 29, 1975.) Apprentice joiner Andrew Prinold plunged a knife into his heart because he feared he was turning into a werewolf. He told of his fears in a desperate phone call to a friend minutes before he killed himself. His death came after he had started attending seances in a bid to contact his dead father,,. His weird flirtation with spiritualism started after he saw the film "The Exorcist", it was said. The first seances were described by 18-year old workmate Stephen Williams, who told the jury: "Five lads took part. They put a glass on the table with numbers and names round it and started talking to it. Within five to ten minutes Andrew started shaking. He was sweating, moaning and groaning. Andrew said the Devil was inside him. I had to punch his jaw to bring him round and he remembered nothing. Then we went off on our motorcycles and Andrew said he could not see, but later he was all right. The Monday before he died he said he saw his father in the mirror." Stephen then told of the telephone call: He said: "Andrew said his face and hands were changing colour and he was turning into a werewolf. He would go quiet and then start growling. I told him to see his brother. He said he had a knife and was going to kill himself." Andrew's girlfriend Celeste Martin said he had mentioned suicide. Pathologist Dr. Frank Pick said Andrew's wound appeared from its angle to be self-inflicted. Verdict: Andrew killed himself. Later, Andrew's mother...who did not attend the inquest said: "I know nothing of seances. I just know he was killed...I can't believe he killed himself."

(7) CIA CULT. (From the book "The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence" by former CIA members Victor Marchetti and John D. Marks.) The CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) is the fraternity of the American political aristocracy and the most powerful and dangerous secret cult of intelligence. Patrons and protectors are the highest officials of the federal government. Its membership extending far beyond governmental circles, reaches into the power centers of industry, commerce, finance and labor. Its friends are many in the areas of important public influence - the academic world and the communication media. The purpose of the cult is to further the foreign policies of the US government by covert and usually illegal means, while at the same time containing the spread of its avowed enemy, communism. It engages in espionage and counter-espionage, in propaganda or false information, in psychological warfare and paramilitary activities. It penetrates and manipulates private institutions and creates its own organizations when necessary. It recruits agents and mercenaries; it bribes and blackmails foreign officials to carry out its most unsavory tasks. It does whatever is required to achieve its goals, without any consideration of ethics involved or the moral consequences of its actions. Traditionally the cult's hope has been to foster a world order in which America would reign supreme, the unchallenged international leader. Today, however, that dream stands tarnished by time and frequent failure.

(8) MORE CIA. Concerning the CIA, Al LaBron (author of the Shaver Mystery CT articles) says: "One of their (CIA) secret projects for implementation of this world order is called Operation Crystal Ball (see: OMNI Magazine, Nov. 1984). Research has shown that the CIA has close ties with the Mafia. (The Mason Grand Master Albert Pike ordered another Mason, Giuseppe Mazzini, to create the Oblonica Order, from within which was created in 1860 another secret society called the Mafiusi, today known as the Mafia), and with world-wide drug operations (this is well documented in a Jack Anderson article which appeared in papers on Dec. 26, 1984), many of these drug lines have been traced back to Basle, Switzerland, (which also happens to be the center of world Masonic and banking lines, as well). The CIA-drug connection is also given in Alfred W. McCoy's book "The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia" (1972-Harper & Row, NY.) The CIA's involvement in Masonically-controlled cults like Mormonism can be seen in Jerald & Sandra Tanner's book "Mormon Spies, Hughes And The CIA (Utah Lighthouse Ministries - Box 1884 - Salt Lake City, Utah 84110). The fact that the CIA is a cult in itself cannot be denied -- and its connection with Masonry and the Illuminati is plain.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SKULL & BONES. A public file on the Order compiled by an independent researcher is available for $15.00. Periodic updates available for $10.00 per year. The importance of The Order is beginning to become apparent to conspiracy students. If you want to keep up to date, write: Richard Landkamer - 3805 Sherwood Lane - Apt. 21 - Houston, Texas 77092.

THE LARSEN FILE. The Sept/Oct, 1985 issue features recent developments that are leading toward the Mark of the Beast, including debit cards and microchip dots. Also, a connection between 666 and ELF. $3.00 to The Larsen File - P.O. Box 4080 - Torrance California 90510. 6 issues for $15.00; 12 for $28.00. Published every other month

ISRAEL: OUR DUTY...OUR DILEMMA. One of the controversies today, that the world (including born-again Christians) understands least is -- the apostate Jew. Biblical (the Scriptures) and secular history give much documentation about it; if one is willing to look beyond the liberal and biased mass communications media. In this volume the apostate Jew, along with his occultic and pagan Kabbalah and Talmud are laid bare for anyone who wants the truth. Send $12.95 for book and our catalog. $2.00 for catalog only. Order from: Christian Truth & Victory Publications - Route 5 - Box 252-A, Alexandria, Minn. 56308.

THE CULT OF THE ALL-SEEING EYE. Explanation of symbols on our money & the Great Seal of the U.S. A look at the U.N. $3.00 plus $1.00 postage from: June Ramsey Library - Rt. 3 - Box 1192 - Spicewood, Texas 78669.

PROPHECY UPDATE. An international newsletter which looks at current events in the light of Bible prophecy. $12.00 per year (Florida residents add 5% sales tax) from: Paragon Press - P.O. Box 866 - Fern Park, FL. 32730-0866.

CONSPIRACY BOOKS. CIA, FBI, Nazis, Mafia, Kennedy Assassination, and more. SASE for list from: Tom Davis Books - P.O. Box 1107 - Aptos, CA. 95001-1107.
